Last of summer harvest

It has turned to autumn and we are trying to catch the last of our summer harvest.

We still have eggplant, marrows, summer greens and the occasional passionfruit soldiering on, and soon we will be wondering what to do with our pumpkins.

It is basically a lot of tidying as we start moving towards the winter solstice. We have just sown wildflowers for colour, companions and beneficial insects and are making staggered plantings of radish, turnip, kale, lettuce and other good autumn veges. Soon we'll get winter seed sowing underway.

Out the front, we are establishing a permanent medicinal herb bed with valerian, burdock, hyssop, lovage and clary sage, among others. We have also been moving seating to the front lawn to make the gardens more social. In another plot, we'll try growing kumara in a semi-traditional way in spring, using mounds of spiralling kumara vine.

The community garden team is doing a lot of tidying as the seasons move towards the winter solstice.
